Tool No. 2: Your Teen Isn't Broken – Their Brain is Rebuilding

---

Scripts for functional boundaries. Boundaries aren't about control. They're about clarity. These scripts give you real examples of what functional boundaries sound like – not perfect scripts, but human ones. Use this to check your tone, reset your energy, and shift from “power struggle” to calm leadership.

Functional Boundary Starters:

Use when you need to set a limit without exploding.

-  “I'm not okay with that.”
-  “We're not doing that right now.”
-  “You can be mad – and I won't let you hit me.”
-  “That's not how we talk to each other.”
-  “This isn't a punishment. It's a limit.”
-  “You're allowed to feel that. And this is still the boundary.”
-  “I won't argue about this. Let's come back to it when we're both calm.”

When Repeating Yourself Feels Useless:

Use when they keep pushing the boundary and you're about to lose it.

-  “My answer hasn't changed.”
-  “I've explained the limit. We're done for now.”
-  “You don't have to like the boundary. You just have to respect it.”
-  “You can keep asking. I'm still not changing my mind.”

Gentle, But Firm Redirects:

Use when you need to course-correct without escalating.

-  “That's not how we solve problems here. Let's try again.”
-  “Take a break and come back when you're ready to talk respectfully.”
-  “I need a pause so I can respond instead of react.”

“You're important to me. This behavior isn't okay. Let's figure it out together.”
